Kira White has compiled an outstanding and extremely well researched and useful interactive map of Thomas & Ann Stone Sites around Hobart and environs

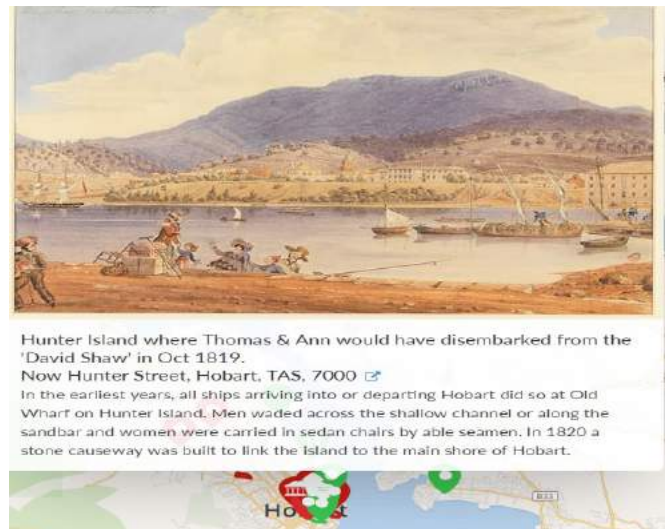

Kira grew up in Melbourne, when she completed qualifications in Economics, Women's Studies and Information Technology. Most of her working career has been in the field of higher education administration.

Kira moved to Hobart, Tasmania in 2003, bringing the Stones migration story full circle. She lives within a few kilometres of where Thomas and Ann Stone first landed. Currently, Kira works part-time as an administrator with the Tasmania Law Reform Institute (University of Tasmania) and she is a keen genealogist. Another of our Family Historians.

Kira White's lineage is: Thomas & Ann Stone (nee Withers); Joseph & Margaret Stone (nee Foster); James Mary Ann (Annie) Stone (nee Castle); James & Lydia (Myrtle) White (nee Stone); Vernon James & Ethel White (nee Esmore).

Usual area of anchorage in early Hobart.

Hunter Island where Thomas & Ann would have disembarked from the 'David Shaw' in Oct 1819.
Now Hunter Street, Hobart, TAS, 7000
In the earliest years, all ships arriving into or departing Hobart did so at Old Wharf on Hunter Island. Men waded across the shallow channel or along the sandbar and women were carried in sedan chairs by able seamen. In 1820 a stone causeway was built to link the island to the main shore of Hobart.

Site of old Government House, where Lieut. Governor Sorell resided in 1819.
Elizabeth Street, near Franklin Square, Hobart TAS 7000
Ann & Thomas, together with Ann's brother Joseph Withers, arrived in Hobart on 11 Oct 1819. They had originally intended to continue on to Sydney, but Ann was pregnant and unwell, so they applied for permission to settle in Tasmania. Governor Sorell issued a temporary landing permit, and they were soon granted full permission to emigrate.
